A week in the life of the world

A year of key elections, the quest for a haven and a celebrated auteur's return

This is a momentous year for elections. Around 2 billion people have the opportunity to cast their ballots in polls that span the globe from the United States to Taiwan, and India to Mexico. The outcomes, as our analysts and correspondents explain, have implications for us all.

It is an almost foregone conclusion that Narendra Modi will be back for a third term as Indian prime minster, certain that Vladimir Putin will continue as president in Russia and highly likely that November's US election will be a rerun of 2020's Biden v Trump contest. Other elections have broad geopolitical implications and could reveal how vulnerable democracies now are to misinformation and cyber interference from malign actors.

Away from the ballot boxes, our reporters reveal which other big stories to watch for in 2024. The big story Page 10 \rightarrow

Our main feature read takes us back to a childhood in Northern Ireland at the height of the Troubles.

Author Darran Anderson reflects on the cost of growing up in Derry, in British-controlled Northern Ireland, and recalls finding relative freedom over the border in the Republic of Ireland.

His beautifully written essay discusses how he came first to crave sanctuary and, as an adult, sought it out practically and emotionally in a new life in London.

In Culture, Mark Kermode interviews Yorgos

Lanthimos ahead of the release of his highly anticipated new film Poor Things. It is the latest collaboration between the Greek director and actor Emma Stone, an adaptation of late Scottish novelist Alasdair Gray's science fiction, Victorian romantic pastiche.

We also meet artists who only got into their stride in later life and find out what's behind the big band revival in jazz music. Culture From page 51 \rightarrow

On the cover Of all the global elections this year, the defining moment may come in the US. "The protective shield that all democracies and social orders rely on - legitimacy of the governing body, some level of elite responsibility, the willingness of citizens to view their neighbours in a civic way - is in an advanced stage of decline or collapse," remarks Larry Jacobs, of the University of Minnesota. Guardian Weekly is an edited selection of some of the best journalism found in the Guardian and Observer newspapers in the UK and the Guardian's digital editions in the UK, US and Australia. The weekly magazine has an international focus and three editions; global, Australia and North America. The Guardian was founded in 1821, and Guardian Weekly in 1919. We exist to hold power to account in the name of the public interest, to uphold liberal and progressive values, to fight for the common good, and to build hope. Our values, as laid out by editor CP Scott in 1921, are honesty, integrity, courage, fairness, and a sense of duty to the reader and the community. The Guardian is wholly owned by the Scott Trust, a body whose purpose is "to secure the financial and editorial independence of the Guardian in perpetuity". We have no proprietor or shareholders, and any profit made is re-invested in journalism.
