The 45th president

What is Donald Trump likely to achieve in power? Leader, page 7. The drama of the transition is over, and the new president's team is largely in place. Now for the drama of government, pages 14-18. Both economics and politics could confound Republican tax plans: Free exchange, page 60. California, America's richest state, is leading the fight against federal power, page 31

Brexit Theresa May promises a "truly global Britain" outside the European Union. Is that plausible? Leader, page 8. Britain opts for a clean break with Europe. Negotiations will still be tricky, page 24. The prime minister's maximalist Brexit supposes immigration cuts. That is a mistake: Bagehot, page 26. How the City hopes to survive the hard road ahead, page 59. Donald Trump suggests a trade deal with Britain, page 25

Gendecide The war on baby girls is winding down, but its effects will be felt for decades: leader, page 10. If baby girls are safer, thank urbanisation, economics and soap operas, page 45

Turkey Recep Tayyip Erdogan may soon have the executive presidency he has long sought, page 19

Xi at Davos China's president seeks to portray his country as a rock of stability in a troubled world. His timing, at least, is faultless, page 42. China's aircraft-carrier programme says a lot about its ambitions, page 43. Why Cambodia has embraced China, and what that means for the region, page 38

Diesel cars To stop carmakers bending the rules, Europe must get tougher: leader, page 9. Fiat Chrysler Automobiles is in regulators' headlights over emissions, page 48

Shareholder value Never fear, the guardians of businesses' favourite doctrine will find a way to adapt to the age of populism: Schumpeter, page 53
